

Foster Y.O.U.T.H. Digital Stories for Sale

Y.O.U.T.H. Digital Stories are mini documentaries created by foster youth in their own words, music selection, pictures, and creativity to tell their own story.

The Y.O.U.T.H. Training Project uses digital stories to educate and train child welfare workers about the experience and needs of foster youth. Making a digital story is an empowering and healing experience for youth, using those stories to empower social workers is the exponential magic of positive youth development.

In Our Own Voices: Youth Tell Stories About Life in Foster Care!

In this series of stories foster youth address the issues that come from growing up in the system. The topics include: the effects of multiple placements, the hazards of labeling youth, dangerous placements, racism in care and much more.

What Made a Difference? Foster Youth Talk About Resiliency

2003

This series identifies and explores what fostered resiliency within these youth. The stories focus on how youth resiliency was supported by relatives, foster parents, social workers, life circumstances, and more.

Breaking the Silence: LGBTQ Foster Youth Stories

2005

Lesbian, Gay, Bi-sexual, Transgender and Queer youth tell us what it was like to survive the foster care system. The youth discuss issues such as dealing with homophobia within the system and larger society, prostitution, and allies who supported them to be the fabulous, not pathological, youth that they are.
